Making Old Orchards New

(By L. M. Crook Logan, Disabled Vocational Soldier in Agricultural Engineering, U. A. C. Paper Prepared for Class in Horticulture.)

It has been found through experiment that orchard rejuvenation is profitable. The West Virginia Experiment station and others have demonstrated this fact, and the same results can undoubtedly be obtained in Utah.

In the experiment of the West Virginia station, six unproductive orchards containing in all 37 acres were used, the total number of trees being 2963. The net profits from these orchards for three years were 7625. The total returns were $13,553.95. The gross returns per acre were $336. The net profits per acre was $186 for the three years. The gross returns for one year per acre was $122. The net profits per acre for one year was $65. From this we can see that rejuvenation paid well.

For the rejuvenation of old orchards certain things must be taken into consideration.

First: The age and vigor of the trees. This depends on the previous care of the orchard. Some trees are too old and devitalized, they are unhealthy and part of the trunks are decaying. Such trees should not be selected.

Second: In some orchards the trees are too close together. The average apple tree should be about thirty feet apart. Great care must be taken in thinning out, so as to have the right variety and the best trees.

Third: The location. The soil conditions should be good as regards fertility and drainage. This is very important. The orchard should not be in a place too much subject to frost as on low bottom land. There are also questions of desirable varieties and economic problems to be considered. The big thing sought for is a new orchard made out of the old so it will be profitable. If this can be done, well and good. If not, the old orchard should be pulled out and the land put to more productive use.

Probably the most important operation in renovating an orchard is the pruning. All dead and diseased limbs should be removed. All cross branches should be cut out. Gradually but surely the tree should be brought to the proper shape, height, vigor and productiveness. The expenses of spraying and picking are much less on a well pruned tree.

Spraying is very important. Insects such as the San Jose scale, codling moth and others must be controlled. Some spraying may be necessary in the dormant season, using miscible oils or lime sulphur. Spraying for codling moth must be done soon after the blossoms fall and at such times during the growing season as will protect the fruit from the entrance of the larvae. Pressure should be great enough to force the mixture into the end of the young fruit. Arsenate of lead is commonly used now for this purpose.

In case irrigation water is scarce cultivation is essential. It is now known that a good mulch conserves the moisture. The plow, the disk harrow and the spike-tooth harrow if freely and properly used will accomplish wonders in stimulating the old trees to productive growth. Coupled with this treatment, barnyard manure can often be used to advantage. Some irrigation will be necessary in connection with proper cultivation.

If the farmers of Cache will either take out or renovate their old unproductive orchards it will mean money in their pockets.

GRADED BUTTER PRICES ARE HIGHER

The United States Department of Agriculture provides a butter inspection service on the New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and Minneapolis markets. This service is not compulsory but it is valuable to producers or dealers who market butter of superior quality as the official once over guarantees the quality of the product and correlates it to its selling price. One day recently a 63-pound tub of butter at one of the markets scored 87 and sold for 50 cents a pound, or a total of $31.50 as compared with another similar weight tub of butter which scored 93 and sold at 63 cents a pound or for $58.60. The higher scoring butter commanded a gross price of $8.79 higher than that of its lower scoring mate. It pays the creamery men to make the best grade of butter possible and then to market it on the scored basis in order to realize its full worth.

Not Meant for Household Pets.
If taken young the grizzly is easy enough to handle, for at birth he weighs only from 10 to 20 ounces and is about the size of a full-grown chipmunk. Later the bears run between 350 and 600 pounds in weight, although they have been known to reach 1,500 pounds. This, of course, makes the domestication of grizzlies by apartment house dwellers difficult.
